Bokillustration 1

En viktig uppgift för illustratörer är att skapa bilder till skönlitterär text. Att visualisera det texten säger hjälper världens i texten att komma till liv. Vanligast är att man jobbar mycket med illustrationer till texter för barn, men även för vuxna, och då ofta i lite finare, mer påkostade, upplagor av en bok.

I det här projektet kommer du att göra illustrationer till en skönlitterär text. Men, du kommer inte att vara helt fri i hur du jobbar. Du måste följa den layoutskiss som visas här:

Texter finns här

- Bamse
- Sagan om Ringen
- Lovecraft

Projektet bör ta dig ca 2-4 veckor.

Arbetsgång

PREPRODUKTION

- ☐ Idégenerering
 - ☐ Läs de tre skönlitterära texterna och bestäm dig för en av dem.
 - ☐ Fundera på hur du kan visa det som händer i texten.
- ☐ Research
 - ☐ Se om det finns illustrationer till texterna redan, gjorda av andra. Det kan vara en bra idé att inte göra bilder som skiljer sig för mycket om texten redan har en etablerad stil.

- ☐ Manus eller skiss
 - ☐ Titta på layoutskissen. Gör skisser på bilder som kan passa texten och bildernas placering.

PRODUKTION

- ☐ Skapa dina illustrationer på valfritt sätt.
- ☐ Formatera texten snyggt, enligt layoutskissen

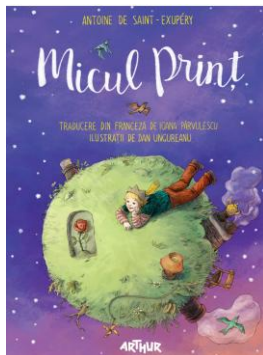

POSTPRODUKTION

- ☐ Sätt ihop text och bilder i Adobe Illustrator.
- ☐ Förbered för redovisning

Kravspekifikation

- ☐ 1 st bildspel som beskriver din process och färdigt resultat
 - ☐ Svar på frågorna:
 - ☐ Hur har du anpassat bilderna efter texten?
 - ☐ Hur har du anpassat bilderna efter layouten?
 - ☐
- ☐ 1 st färdig layout i .pdf
 - ☐ Kom ihåg att bädda in typsnitt!

THE LORD OF THE RINGS

It was not so now. Beneath the walls of besieged there still were acres filled by the slaves of Saruman, but most of the valley had become a wilderness of weeds and thorns. Brambles trailed upon the ground, or clambering over hush and hush, made shaggy caves where small beasts housed. No trees grew there; but among the rank grasses could still be seen the burned and ash-brown stumps of ancient groves. It was a sad country, silent now but for the stony noise of quick waters. Smokes and steam drifted in sultry clouds and lurked in the bellows. The riders did not speak. Many doubted in their hearts, wondering to what dismal end their journey led.

After they had ridden for some miles, the highway became a wide street, paved with great flat stones, squared and laid with skill, as blades of grass were seen in any joint. Deep gutters, filled with trickling water, ran down on either side. Suddenly a tall pillar loomed up before them. It was black, and set upon it was a great stone, carved and painted in the likeness of a long White Hand. Its finger pointed north. Not far now they knew that the gates of Isengard must stand, and their hearts were heavy, but their eyes could not pierce the mist ahead.

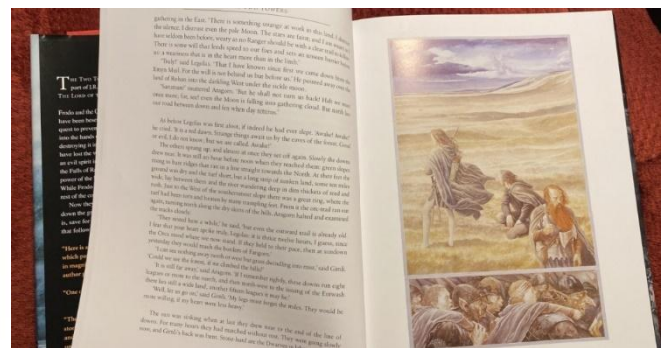

Beneath the mountain's arm within the Wizard's Vale through years uncounted had stood that ancient place that Men called Fangorn. Purely it was shaped in the making of the mountains, but mighty works the Men of Westmarch had wrought there of old, and Saruman had dwelt there long and had not been idle.

This was its fashion, while Saruman was at his height, accounted by many the chief of Wizards. A great ring-wall of stone, like towering cliffs, stood out from the shelter of the mountain-side, from which it ran and then returned again. One entrance only was there made in it, a great arch debased in the southern wall. Here through the black rock a long tunnel had been hewn, closed at either end with mighty doors of iron. They were so wrought and poised upon their huge hinges, poised of steel driven into the living stone, that when unbarred they could be moved with a light thrust of the arms, noiselessly. One who passed in and came at length out of the echoing tunnel, beheld a plain, a great circle, somewhat hollowed like a vast shallow bowl; a circle it measured from rim to rim. Once it had been green and filled with avens, and groves of fruitful trees, watered by streams that flowed from the mountain to a lake. But no green thing grew there in the latter days of Saruman. The roads were paved with stone-slugs, dark and hard; and beside their borders instead of trees there marched long lines of pillars, some of marble, some of copper and of iron, joined by heavy chains.

Many houses there were, chambers, halls, and passages, cut and tunnelled back into the walls upon their inner side, so that all the
